Good morning, everyone!

Welcome to the NeuraTech AI Solution Joint Investors Community! I'm the assistant to Professor Montgomery Keane. It's a great honor to embark on this exciting journey with all of you today.

Our community was founded by Professor Montgomery Keane, with a clear mission: to enhance the financial literacy of global investors through cutting-edge technology and deep expertise, while helping each member achieve sustainable wealth growth. Whether you're a brand-new investor just starting out or a seasoned pro with years of experience, we'll provide tailored solutions to meet your individual needs and help you reach your financial goals.

In the NAS Community, our core strength comes from having a team of experienced analysts. This team not only offers you thorough investment education but also provides professional and practical investment advice based on current market trends. Whether you want to dive deep into the complexities of stocks, bonds or cryptocurrencies, we are here to give you clear guidance and help you overcome any investment challenges you may face.

Here are several key advantages of joining the NAS community:

1. Personalized Investment Advice: You'll receive tailored advice and strategies based on your individual investment needs, ensuring that every step is headed in the right direction.
2. Close-Knit Community Interaction: The NAS community feels like a big family, where you can freely connect and share insights with investors from across the U.S. Whether you're a beginner or experienced, this platform provides a space to learn, grow, and find like-minded partners.
3. Cutting-Edge Tech Support: We are about to launch a public test of the AlphaStream Quant 5.0 trading system. Developed by the Research Center, this top-tier system, valued at billions of dollars, will significantly enhance your investment success rate, especially in highly volatile markets.
4. Ongoing Learning Opportunities: We offer a wide range of online courses and real-time market insights to help you not only improve your trading skills but also ensure long-term success. Whether through free educational content or paid advanced courses, you'll find the right resources to support your learning.

5. Charitable Opportunities: Our focus is not only on personal wealth growth but also on making a broader impact through charitable efforts. In a previous event, we helped thousands of people change their lives and raised nearly $10 million, laying the foundation for our upcoming community charity fund.

We understand that everyone aspires to improve their lives through investing and create more possibilities for the future. The second online Investor Exchange of 2024 is about to kick off, and we warmly invite anyone eager to enhance their investment skills to join us. Let's learn, grow, and make a meaningful contribution to charity together!

Currently, the Professor Montgomery is conducting important investment research in Asia and is temporarily unable to personally share his insights with everyone. However, don't worry—I'll be delivering his latest market updates to you as soon as they are compiled, ensuring you don't miss any critical opportunities. If you already have a stock or crypto account, now is the best time to access our exclusive trading strategies. We'll provide you with customized strategy recommendations to help you capture every profit opportunity in the market. Are you ready to embrace the challenges and opportunities ahead? Join us now and step into a brighter future together!

As more new members join the community, I'll be giving a brief introduction to our community every day. If you know anyone interested in investing and looking to change their life through it, don't miss out on this great opportunity!

Yesterday, I shared the mentor's recent views on investments, and I believe everyone now has a better understanding of the current stock market. Recently, China's government introduced large-scale policy stimulus to its capital markets, leading to significant gains in both A-shares and H-shares. The mentor, along with some international investment banks from Wall Street, also conducted on-site research in China. If all goes well, the mentor will return next week and hold a live session to share his experiences and insights from his trip to China.

Today, I'll be using the mentor's original "Market Sentiment Analysis" to deeply analyze the current market. This may give you a clearer understanding of the direction of the U.S. stock market. By focusing on the following three points, you'll better grasp the market's logic:

1. First, we need to understand why the three major indices are fluctuating at high levels, and why they might even face a slight downward adjustment. In our last online investor exchange session, we learned how to use candlestick charts to analyze market trends. By looking at the recent weekly candlestick charts, we can clearly see that since June, whenever four consecutive bullish candles appear on the weekly chart, they are followed by a bearish candle and a market adjustment. This pattern indicates that whenever the weekly increase reaches around 7%, a correction tends to follow, and after each correction, new buying opportunities usually emerge.

At high levels, market sentiment becomes more pronounced. The market always has its own operating logic, and every fluctuation reflects the underlying emotions and expectations. The stock market has seen significant gains this year, especially with the strong performance of the seven major tech giants in the U.S. However, as these stocks reach new highs, the market has started to worry about whether these companies can meet expected earnings. October, being the time when third-quarter earnings reports are released, makes bullish forces more hesitant. Therefore, understanding the changes in market sentiment and the cyclical adjustments is key to navigating current market volatility. Remaining patient and waiting for new buying opportunities is often the best way to find chances during turbulent times.

2. As the market has gradually absorbed expectations of a Federal Reserve rate cut, the focus will now shift to third-quarter earnings reports. For stocks that have already undergone corrections and are at relatively low levels, even if earnings miss expectations, the decline may be relatively limited. However, for high-priced stocks that have not yet experienced a correction, disappointing earnings will likely lead to a round of downward adjustments. The position of a stock's price directly influences market sentiment between bulls and bears.

This means that stocks at lower levels, having already adjusted, have absorbed some of the risks and face relatively less downward pressure, while higher-priced stocks are at greater risk of a pullback. Investors need to closely watch the performance during earnings season, carefully assess individual stock valuations and risk levels, and seize the opportunities brought by changes in market sentiment.

3. During the lull before third-quarter earnings reports are released, we've seen a significant rebound in the Chinese stock market. Meanwhile, after the dollar rate cut, many funds have started flowing into emerging markets, choosing these markets as new investment grounds. This outflow of capital has led to a decrease in buying activity in U.S. stocks. In contrast, emerging markets like China's stock market are attracting more capital, while many companies in the U.S. market have valuations that are already high, leaving limited room for further growth.

Because of this, the professor has recently advised focusing on the rebound of high-quality stocks that have been oversold. These stocks not only offer a margin of safety but also present better profit opportunities. For high-quality companies that have already undergone corrections, their current prices are relatively more attractive. This approach not only helps protect against market volatility but also provides investors with a more cost-effective buying opportunity.

In practice, using market sentiment is key to deciding whether a trade is worth making. For instance, the current crypto market is hiding more opportunities. This year, Bitcoin was boosted by the favorable effects of its four-year halving cycle, reaching an all-time high. However, after the benefits were realized, the market entered a period of continued fluctuation. As the hype around the November presidential election escalates, Bitcoin saw a trend increase, and just as the professor predicted, signs of a new pullback emerged yesterday. Could this be the start of another downward trend?

Long-term Bitcoin holders have missed several opportunities for significant profits during market swings. However, by following the swing trading strategy recently advocated by the professor, one can earn substantial profits in any market condition. Market sentiment plays a crucial role in this approach. Once you learn how to use market sentiment to understand market fluctuations, you can avoid many unnecessary losses.

The market sentiment cycle is a very important indicator. If you want to gain a deeper understanding of its complexities, I strongly recommend paying close attention to the professor's insights next week. This will help you master more effective trading strategies, avoid the risks posed by market volatility, and seize every opportunity to profit.

If you already have a crypto account, you definitely don't want to miss out on the recent swing trading opportunities! This could be an excellent chance for you to achieve substantial returns. If you don't have a crypto account yet, we strongly recommend opening one as soon as possible. Investing shouldn't be limited to a single market; having an international investment mindset is crucial. Recently, the Chinese stock market has been a perfect example the Shanghai Composite Index rose by about 23% in one week, while the Dow Jones Index has only increased by nearly 25% over the past two years.

When you view the market from an institutional perspective, you'll uncover more hidden opportunities and potential gains.
